

No running water, no car, no electricity or any of the things it powers: internet, phone, heating, light bulb. Just a wooden cabin, on a smallholding, by the edge of a stand of spruce. Building a home with your bare hands. Learning to make fire, collecting water from the spring, foraging and fishing. A life governed only by the rhythms of the sun and seasons. An attempt to discover what it means to be human at a time when the boundaries between man and machine are blurring.

'The Way Home paints a picture not only of how broken our culture has become, but of how to begin building a new one. It demands to be read – and then lived by.'
Paul Kingsnorth, author of Real England and Confessions of a Recovering Environmentalist

'Illustrates beautifully that giving up many of the things in life that we treat as indispensable may actually be less of a sacrifice than a liberation.'
Neil Ansell, author of Deep Country
